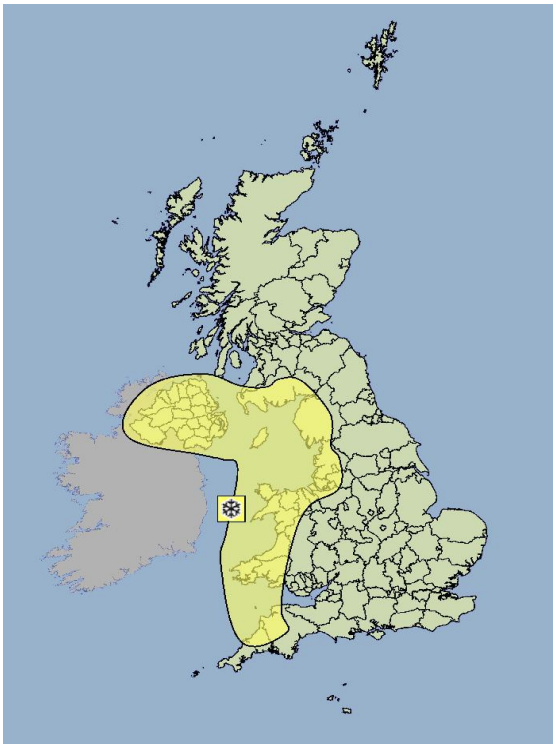
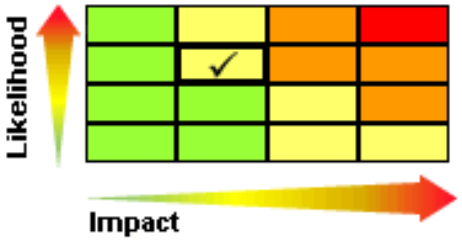
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A cold northwesterly airstream will extend southeastwards across the warning areas on Thursday bringing occasional snow showers. Around 2 cm of snow is possible even to low levels in places. 5-10 cm is possible on high ground above about 200 m.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 12th Jan 2017 until 23:55 on Thu, 12th Jan 2017

Snow showers, initially affecting Northern Ireland and southwest Scotland, will progressively extend southeast to affect the rest of the warning areas during Thursday.

There is the potential for disruption to transport networks with longer journey times. Icy stretches on untreated roads and pavements are also possible.

This warning has been updated to extend it into parts of southwest England and to slightly adjust the boundary across southwest Scotland.
